I. INTRODUCTION

This case is about anticompetitive practices in the labor market for restaurant-based managers of Carl’s Jr.<sup>1</sup> restaurants across California. These workers have developed specialized skills and expertise in the Carl’s Jr. brand, Complaint (“Compl.”) at ¶¶ 96-98, and yet they toil under wages set at or near the minimum, brutal working conditions, and unbearable scheduling practices that force them to come into work at the last minute, cancelling family plans and forcing them to scramble to make new arrangements. Compl. at ¶¶ 31-39. Notwithstanding their skills and expertise, they have little bargaining power because Defendants have inserted into their franchise agreements with franchisees a prohibition against hiring restaurant-based managers from other franchisees or corporate-owned stores. Compl. at ¶¶ at 47-53. That prohibition effectively eliminates competition for the skills and expertise of Carl’s Jr. restaurant-based managers. Compl. at ¶ 58.

Defendants point to no legitimate justification for this arrangement, and yet they argue that the Court should dismiss Plaintiffs’ claims in part because Plaintiffs’ grievances about their wages and working conditions are “the type typically raised directly with one’s employer and not the type of complaint to be addressed by the antitrust laws.” Defendants’ Memorandum of Points and Authorities in Support of their Demurrer to Plaintiffs’ Class Action Complaint (“Def. Mem.”) at 7.

Defendants ignore that the antitrust laws provide a powerful and increasingly important tool for employees to ensure that labor markets, like other markets, are competitive, and not <sup>1</sup> Named as defendants are Carl Karcher Enterprises, LLC, and Carl’s Jr. Restaurants, LLC, which are collectively referred to herein as “Defendants” or “Carl’s Jr.,” and are the franchisor of “Carl’s Jr.”-branded restaurants in California and elsewhere.

1 rigged against workers. Regulators, public enforcement officials, and scholars have expressed a 2 “growing concern about . . . a general reduction in competition among firms, shifting the balance 3 of bargaining power towards employers.”<sup>2</sup> According to some, “[s]uch a shift could explain not 4 only the redistribution of revenues from worker wages to managerial earnings and profits, but 5 also the rising disparity in pay among workers with similar skills.” CEA Monopsony Br. at 1.

7 Indeed, recent academic attention has focused specifically on the same sort of 8 anticompetitive conduct that is at the heart of this case—no-hire clauses in franchise 9 agreements.<sup>3</sup> That research suggests that these restraints might exert powerful downward 10 pressure on wages for employees of franchisees and that these harms might be particularly acute 11 in the fast-food labor market. Employer Collusion in Franchise Sector at 10-16.
12

13 Increasingly, the labor market for low-wage workers is not free. In this case, Plaintiffs 14 seek to strike back against that trend.

15 II. ARGUMENT

16 A. The Complaint Plainly Alleges a “Contract or Agreement”

17 Defendants contend, first, that the Complaint should be dismissed because “Plaintiffs fail 18 to allege facts sufficient to demonstrate the existence of any agreement at all.” Def. Mem. at 2. In 19 antitrust cases alleging naked agreements in restraint of trade, defendants frequently argue that

27 Franchise Sector, Nat. Bureau of Econ. Research Conference Paper, July 18, 2017, available at 28 http://conference.nber.org/confer//2017/SI2017/LS/Krueger\_Ashenfelter.pdf (“Employer Collusion in Franchise Sector”).

1 the plaintiffs have alleged insufficient circumstantial evidence of an agreement to withstand a 2 demurrer. Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, (2007) 550 U.S. 544, 554. It is rare, after all, for 3 competitors to explicitly and openly enter into an agreement not to compete.

4 This, however, is not like most cases, and Defendants' reliance on this argument is 5 misplaced. Here, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants and their franchisees entered into an express, 6 written agreement not to hire each other's workers. Compl. at ¶¶ 2, 48-52. Thus, the evidence of 7 an agreement here goes well beyond what was sufficient to state a claim concerning purported 8 no-poach agreements among Silicon Valley executives, which were reflected in email 9 communications. Compare, e.g., In re Animation Workers Antitrust Litig. (N.D. Cal. 2015) 123 10 F. Supp. 3d 1175, 1182. The agreement here appears on the face of the written "Preliminary 11 Agreements" that potential franchisees must sign before obtaining a Carl's Jr. franchise, id. at ¶ 12 50, and is part of the franchise agreements that franchisees enter with Carl's Jr at the beginning 13 of the franchisee relationship, id. at ¶ 52. There can be no dispute that Plaintiffs have alleged an 14 agreement among Defendants and franchisees, including the franchisees that employed Plaintiffs.

17 B. The Franchise Structure Does Not Insulate Defendants from Antitrust Claims.

18 Defendants also argue that they could not have entered into an agreement with 19 franchisees in violation of the Cartwright Act because they and the franchisees are part of a 20 single enterprise. Def. Mem. at 3. For support, they rely on a federal district court opinion from 21 25 years ago. Williams v. I.B. Fisher Nevada (D. Nev. 1992) 794 F. Supp. 1026. That case 22 involved a similar no-hire agreement among Jack-in-the-Box franchisees "whereby the parties 23 agree[d] not to offer employment to a manager of another Jack-in-the-Box within six months of 24 termination from employment at a previous restaurant without a written waiver from the 25 previous owner." Id. at 1029. The plaintiff was a manager affected by the agreement who 26 brought federal Sherman Act claims against his employer. The court granted summary judgment 27
28

1 to the employer, reasoning that the owners of Jack-in-the-Box restaurants were part of a single 2 enterprise incapable of conspiring with itself. Id. at 1032.

3 That case is inapposite here for three reasons. First, in Williams the court explained that 4 the cornerstone of the single-entity analysis was “competition between entities,” and concluded 5 that Jack-in-the-Box had done “everything in its power to minimize competition and promote 6 uniformity between franchisees.” Id. By contrast, CKE’s former CEO has explained that

8 [Carl’s Jr.] franchisees choose their restaurant’s location, 9 determine how much they will pay for the location, invest their 10 own capital in facilities and equipment, choose the prices they 11 charge for products and manage every aspect of their restaurants 12 day to day operations . . . Our franchisees are not a division, 13 subsidiary or alter ego of CKE, but are truly independent small 14 businessmen and businesswomen who know how to drive their 15 own business.

16 Compl. at ¶ 40. Carl’s Jr. franchisees are particularly distinct in their employment of restaurant 17 workers. Id. at ¶ 41. It seems, therefore, that even under Williams’s framework, Plaintiffs’ claims 18 should survive demurrer.

19 Second, Williams resolved claims under the Sherman Antitrust Act; it did not address the 20 scope of the Cartwright Act. The California Supreme Court has explained that “interpretations of 21 federal antitrust law are at most instructive, not conclusive, when construing the Cartwright Act, 22 given that the Cartwright Act was modeled not on federal antitrust statutes but instead on statutes 23 enacted by California’s sister states around the turn of the 20th century.” In re Cipro Cases I & 24 II, (2015) 61 Cal. 4th 116, 142. To be sure, like claims under the Sherman Act, claims under the 25 Cartwright Act must allege “concerted action by separate entities.” G.H.I.I. v. MTS, Inc. (Ct.
26 App. 1983) 147 Cal. App. 3d 256, 266. But when applying this principle, California courts have 27 set a high bar for establishing that distinct corporate entities are part of a single entity incapable 28 of conspiring with itself. Indeed, the California Supreme Court has concluded in other contexts that parties to franchise agreements can engage in concerted conduct in violation of the 1 Cartwright Act even if the parties may be considered a “type of joint enterprise.” Mailand v.

2 Burckle (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 367, 378.

3 Third, intervening U.S. Supreme Court precedent suggests that Williams is no longer 4 good law, even for the purposes of interpreting the Sherman Act. In Williams, the court 5 concluded that the franchisees could not conspire with each other because of substantial 6 cooperation between them in marketing the Jack-in-the-Box brand. 794 F. Supp. 1029-32. But in 7 American Needle v. National Football League, (2010) 560 U.S. 183, Justice Stevens, writing for 8 the Supreme Court nearly a decade after Williams, explained that “the question is not whether the 9 defendant is a legally single entity or has a single name; nor is the question whether the parties 10 involved ‘seem’ like one firm or multiple firms in any metaphysical sense. The key is whether 11 the alleged ‘contract, combination . . . , or conspiracy’ is concerted action—that is, whether it 12 joins together separate decisionmakers.” Id. at 195. Applying that framework, the Court 13 concluded that NFL franchises “do not possess either the unitary decisionmaking quality or the 14 single aggregation of economic power characteristic of independent action.” Id. at 196.

17 Like the NFL franchises in American Needle, the Carl’s Jr. franchisees in this case are 18 distinct entities, both in terms of decisionmaking and economic power. Perhaps because of its 19 desire to disclaim joint employer status, Carl’s Jr.’s public disclosures and agreements emphasize 20 that franchisees operate separately from each other and from CKE. Those documents make 21 expressly clear that no franchise shall hold itself out as “agent, . . . partner, subsidiary, [or] joint 22 venturer” of Carl’s Jr. Compl. at ¶ 43.

24 Thus, even under the framework applied by the court in Williams, the parties to the no-25 hire agreement are sufficiently distinct to trigger application of the antitrust laws to their 26 concerted conduct. Certainly, under the Cartwright Act or under the Sherman Act as applied 27 post-American Needle, Plaintiffs sufficiently plead that Defendants have entered into an 28

1 agreement between distinct economic entities.

2 C. Plaintiffs Have Standing to Sue under the Cartwright Act

3 Defendants also argue that Plaintiffs do not have standing to sue under the Cartwright Act 4 because they have not alleged that they were injured because of Defendants’ conduct. Cal. Bus.
5 & Prof. Code § 16750(a) (private litigant must be “injured in his or her business or property by 6 reason of anything forbidden or declared unlawful by [the Cartwright Act]”); see Vinci v. Waste
7 Mgmt., Inc. (1995) 36 Cal. App. 4th 1811, 1814.

9 To plead standing under the Cartwright Act, a plaintiff must merely allege “the type of 10 injury the antitrust laws were intended to prevent, and which flows from the invidious conduct 11 which renders defendants’ acts unlawful.” Marsh v. Anesthesia Service Medical Group, Inc.
12 (2011) 200 Cal. App. 4th 480, 495; see also Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16750(a) (private litigant 13 must be “injured in his or her business or property by reason of anything forbidden or declared 14 unlawful by [the Cartwright Act]”).

16 Here, Defendants contend that Plaintiffs have alleged nothing more than everyday 17 workplace grievances, and have not alleged damages arising from anticompetitive conduct. But 18 Defendants are missing the point. Plaintiffs do not bring this case merely as “employees” against 19 their employer complaining about working conditions—they bring this claim as suppliers against 20 the ringleader of a horizontal conspiracy among purchasers (of labor). The alleged wrong is 21 exactly what the antitrust laws were designed to prevent. After all, it is a fundamental premise of 22 the antitrust laws that competition between employers places upward pressure on wages and 23 working conditions. DOJ/FTC Guidance at 2 (“[C]ompetition among employers helps actual and 24 potential employees through higher wages, better benefits, or other terms of employment.”); see 25 also Vinci, 36 Cal. App. 4th at 1814 (injury is one that the antitrust laws are designed to protect 26 against). And without competitive forces in the labor market, employers have less incentive to 27
28

1 pay their workers more or to treat them better.

2 Defendants' standing argument has been rejected in antitrust cases alleging anti-3 competitive employment practices. See In re High-Tech Employee Antitrust Litig., (N.D. Cal.
4 2012) 856 F. Supp. 2d 1103, 1123 (dismissing argument that high-tech workers had not 5 sufficiently alleged antitrust standing in no-poach case involving Silicon Valley workers). As 6 noted by that court, workers are injured by anticompetitive conduct when "an employee is the 7 direct and intended object of an employer's anticompetitive conduct." Id. (citing Ostrofe v. H.S.
8 Crocker Co., Inc. (9th Cir. 1984) 740 F.2d 739, 742-43.

10 In this case, Plaintiffs allege that the no-hire agreement removed competition between 11 and among Carl's Jr. franchisees and Defendants in the employment of restaurant-based 12 managers. Vinci v. Waste Mgmt., Inc., 36 Cal. App. 4th at 1814 (Carwright Act plaintiff must 13 plead "the existence of an antitrust violation with resulting harm to the plaintiff"). The no-hire 14 agreement thus caused harm to workers in the labor market for restaurant-based Carl's Jr.
15 managers in California by reducing competition for those workers. Compl. at ¶¶ 2, 7, 80, 108; 16 see also Vinci, 36 Cal. App. 4th at 1814 (direct causal relationship between restraint and injury 17 and an injury that the antitrust laws are designed to protect against). Plaintiffs worked in this 18 labor market and experienced direct harm from the restraint on competition in the form of 19 reduced wages, unpredictable schedules, and poor working conditions. Compl. at ¶ 108; see also 20 Vinci, 36 Cal. App. 4th at 1814 (the absence of more direct victims and double recovery).

22 Further, it makes no difference that Plaintiffs have not alleged that they ever tried to 23 switch to a different restaurant. As an initial matter, Plaintiffs have alleged that it is "common 24 knowledge" among restaurant-based managers that they cannot transfer between Carl's Jr.
25 restaurant owners. Compl. at ¶ 58. So for most workers affected by the "no hire" agreement, it 26 would never be worth attempting to transfer to another franchisee.
27
28

1 But Plaintiffs could allege Cartwright Act claims even if they were entirely oblivious to 2 the no-hire agreement and nonetheless never sought a transfer to improve their working 3 conditions. The law is clear that to state an antitrust claim a plaintiff need not allege that 4 competitors actually competed in a specific market, Palmer v. BRG of Georgia, Inc., (1990) 498
5 U.S. 46, 49-50; it is enough that they have agreed not to compete. Similarly, in this case, 6 Plaintiffs need not allege that competing franchisees actually competed over either of the 7 Plaintiffs. Plaintiffs also need not allege that they sought work for another restaurant or even that 8 they would have preferred to work at another restaurant. Rather, it is enough to allege that 9 competitors agreed with each other not to compete for restaurant-based managers and that as 10 restaurant-based managers, Plaintiffs were injured by this harm to competition.
11

12 Finally, in support of their standing arguments, Defendants point to several cases where 13 courts have held that employees do not have antitrust standing to allege Cartwright Act claims 14 against their employers. Def. Mem. at 7-8 (citing Silguero v. Creteguard, Inc., (2010) 187 Cal.
15 App. 4th 60, and Vinci, 36 Cal. App. 4th 1811). Those cases reveal Defendants' confusion about 16 the nature of the claims against them here. Plaintiffs do not challenge consumer-oriented 17 anticompetitive conduct like price fixing more appropriately addressed through Cartwright Act 18 claims brought by consumers or competitors. Vinci, 36 Cal. App. 4th 1811. Nor do Plaintiffs 19 challenge a termination that can be addressed through unlawful termination claims. Silguero v.
20 Creteguard, Inc., 187 Cal. App. 4th 60. Rather, they allege an agreement among horizontal 21 competitors to restrain competition—which is the prototype of an antitrust claim. The employer is 22 only one of many of these horizontal competitors who should be competing for the labor of 23 restaurant-based CKE managers. And Plaintiffs allege anticompetitive harm to wages and 24 working conditions that can only be addressed through antitrust claims.
25
26
27
28

1       D. Plaintiffs Have Standing to Sue under the UCL

2           Defendants also argue that Plaintiffs do not have standing to assert claims under 3 California’s Unfair Competition Law (UCL), Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200. Def. Mem. at 8-9.
4 To have standing to assert claims under the UCL, a plaintiff must have “suffered injury in fact 5 and . . . lost money or property as a result of the unfair competition.” Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 6 17204.

8           Plaintiffs have easily pled UCL standing here. They allege (1) that Defendants 9 participated in an illegal restraint of trade that limited competition for restaurant-based CKE 10 managers, Compl. at ¶¶ 2, 47-51; (2) that Plaintiffs worked as restaurant-based CKE managers, 11 Compl. at ¶¶ 19-32; and (3) that the alleged restraint caused Plaintiffs to lose money or property 12 by suppressing their wages and worsening their working conditions, Compl. at ¶ 7. See Kwikset 13 Corp. v. Superior Court, (2011) 51 Cal. 4th 310, 327.
14

15           Defendants further argue that Plaintiffs do not have standing to assert UCL claims 16 because they are not able to seek restitution for the alleged UCL violations. As the California 17 Supreme Court has cautioned, however, “[t]he concept of restoration or restitution, as used in the 18 UCL, is not limited only to the return of money or property that was once in the possession of 19 that person.” Korea Supply Co. v. Lockheed Martin Corp., (2003) 29 Cal. 4th 1134, 1149.

21           And even if the Court concludes that Plaintiffs cannot seek monetary restitution, that is 22 not dispositive of the standing analysis. Plaintiffs also seek injunctive relief under the UCL, 23 which is available to them whether or not Defendants deprived them of a vested monetary 24 interest. In re High-Tech Employee Antitrust Litig., 856 F. Supp. 2d at 1124-26. As the 25 California Supreme Court has explained, to make “standing under section 17204 dependent on 26 eligibility for restitution under section 17203 would turn the remedial scheme of the UCL on its 27 head.” Kwikset Corp. v. Superior Court (2011) 51 Cal. 4th at 337.
