“I had never experienced wage theft before this and didn’t know what to do until I met with Towards Justice. I feel proud and happy that I could be a good leader for the other people who have lived this. I feel it was a blessing from God that we could find help.”

Walter Mancia
Who We Are

Towards Justice increases economic stability for working families by expanding access to justice for vulnerable workers. We do this by empowering workers to defend and advance their employment rights, connecting them to quality legal services, increasing recovery of earned wages, and improving public awareness of wage theft and its ramifications.

Towards Justice provided free, confidential workplace rights analyses to over 1,100 workers in our first three years. We also distributed workplace rights information through immigrant service providers across Colorado, trained staff at 20+ partner organizations on how to identify wage theft, provided continuing legal education to our 36 Collaborating Attorneys, and trained and supported over 50 Just Wages Navigators. Meanwhile, we represent workers in court – approximately 320 of them so far – and have helped them to recover over $825,000 in stolen wages, fees, and penalties.

These same workers become our partners in educating the community about wage theft. For example, Walter Mancia came to Towards Justice about his wages and ended up discussing wage theft on television, organizing his colleagues at an Aurora, Colorado grocery store, and recovering $305,000 on their behalf. Focusing on the poorest, most vulnerable workers in America, our combination of strategic litigation and communications encourages redress of long-standing systemic injustice.

“Our work increases economic stability for working families by expanding access to justice for vulnerable workers. We do this by empowering workers to defend and advance their employment rights, connecting them to quality legal services, increasing recovery of earned wages, and improving public awareness of wage theft and its ramifications.”

Alexander Hood, Founder and Director of Litigation
Dear All,

Thank you so much for joining us in the fight against workplace injustice. At Towards Justice, we are awed and humbled by what we have accomplished during our first three years. We couldn’t do it without you. Our community drives us, supports us, and demands thoughtful analysis of our work. Together, we can address the seemingly intractable challenge of workplace injustice.

Our clients take the lead in our work – serving as class representatives in litigation, speaking to the media and the community about wage theft, and connecting wage theft victims to our organization. Thanks to them, over 1,100 workers have come to us for help in just three years. These workers remind me every day of the hurdles that stand in the way of the American Dream. Too often, their experience epitomizes the nickel-and-diming that calcifies inequality in our society. This rampant wage theft doesn’t just rob people of money, it robs them of their time and their dignity. At Towards Justice, we fight to get it back.

With your help, we can build on the foundation we have laid these first three years. Together we can reinvigorate economic mobility and make the American Dream mean something again.

Thank you for believing in Towards Justice and the working families we serve.

Sincerely,

Nina E. DiSalvo, Executive Director

Our History

“Alex created a tremendous organization, and having the opportunity to expand its reach and draw attention to its work is wonderful. Meanwhile, I get to make a real difference in the lives of immigrant families.”

Nina DiSalvo, Executive Director

Building on previous work representing low-wage and immigrant workers with Andy Schmidt, Alex Hood founded Towards Justice in January 2014 to address the gap in the legal market that left so many immigrant victims of wage theft without access to justice. While not a household concept, wage theft is a rampant problem. The Colorado Fiscal Institute estimates that $750 million in earned wages is stolen from Colorado workers each year, and the Economic Policy Institute estimates that $50 Billion is stolen from workers nationwide on an annual basis. This widespread theft disproportionately victimizes low-wage workers, immigrants, women and racial minorities. It can drive workers to financial ruin, increase stress, upend relationships, undermine civic participation, and hamper economic mobility.

Focusing on wage theft and the systemic injustices that deprive low-wage workers of the money they rightfully earn, Towards Justice empowers workers while advancing systemic reform. Towards Justice initially took cases for individual workers who had been exploited by their employers. Since May 2014, Towards Justice has focused on addressing systemic problems impacting our community’s most vulnerable populations by representing large groups of employees through strategic impact litigation. Meanwhile, Towards Justice has expanded its work as an access to justice clearinghouse for wage theft victims and as an educational resource for the community. In this way, we deter wage theft, empower workers, and prevent this problem from continuing to undermine economic mobility in our society.

Our Programs

IMPACT LITIGATION
Towards Justice’s IMPACT Litigation Program attacks the ugly underbelly of America’s economic success through creative lawyering and strategic communications. Alejandro Menocal came to Towards Justice frustrated about earning $1 per day for work performed while held at an immigrant detention center in Aurora, Colorado. With Towards Justice as counsel, Alejandro discussed detention center conditions with Colorado Public Radio and the Associated Press, and brought claims for forced labor and unjust enrichment against the country’s second largest private prison provider. Meanwhile, an au pair in Highlands Ranch, Colorado alerted Towards Justice of systemic injustices in the J-1 visa program. That au pair is now seeking redress for a class of over 50,000 au pairs and Towards Justice has alerted the public to abuses in the au pair program through The Washington Post, Colorado Public Radio, Telemundo, Reuters, Law360, Denver Business Journal, CBS Money Watch, Law Week Colorado, and others. With 16 current cases in litigation, and over 100 media hits about our work thus far, Towards Justice is giving voice to marginalized workers and empowering them as partners in advancing change both in the courtroom and in the public square.
Our Programs

ACCESS TO JUSTICE

Our Access to Justice Program offers free, confidential workplace rights claims analysis to low-wage and immigrant workers, and connects them directly with individuals who can help advance their claims. Those individuals may be members of our Collaborating Attorneys Network, who we train through Continuing Legal Education courses and ongoing technical assistance, or non-attorney advocates who we train as Just Wages Navigators capable of supporting workers as they present wage theft claims to the Colorado Department of Labor and Employment. We also work with investigators in the U.S. Department of Labor Wage and Hour Division, as well as non-profit legal service providers. By bringing together non-traditional partners, Towards Justice empowers workers, deters wage theft, and gets hard earned wages back in the hands of America’s workforce.

“Too often the layers of developers, labor brokers, contractors and subcontractors within the construction industry hide behind and blame each other when confronted with workplace rights violations on their job sites. Luckily, the law pierces through these relationships, allocates responsibility to all of these players, and ultimately holds them to account for cheating vulnerable immigrant workers.”

David Seligman, Towards Justice Attorney

After learning about Towards Justice, a worker moves through our Access to Justice Program as follows:
“I knew how much I was working, and that I had to be away from my family all the time. I was very frustrated that I didn’t get paid for my time, and couldn’t find anyone who understood that frustration until I met Towards Justice. I hope I can finally get paid for all the hours I worked and also help out some of the other guys as well.”

-Alfonso Avendano
Financial Development

National recognition – at least in workplace justice circles – has helped us to lay the groundwork for a sustainable funding base. We were lucky to receive a start-up grant from the RW Sherman Trust in 2014, and have since received general operating support from various Colorado foundations including the Denver Foundation, the Colorado Health Foundation, the Longmont Community Foundation, and the Colorado Bar Foundation. Meanwhile, our litigation work is supported by the Impact Fund, the Skadden Fellowship Foundation, and individual donations from private attorneys and law firms. Our litigation program also generates exempt function income for Towards Justice. In 2015, attorney’s fees recovered from Defendants covered nearly one third of our budget. We hope to grow that amount in future years.

Although we are proud of the funding base we have developed in a short time, we are anxious to expand our work, represent more workers in IMPACT Litigation, and scale up our Access to Justice Program. We are tremendously grateful to our current and future supporters for their commitment to the working families we serve.
